9 cheetahs reach Kuno, India count 48

Nine cheetahs airlifted from Botswana arrived at Kuno National Park in Madhya Pradesh on Saturday and were released into an enclosure, boosting India's big cat count to 48. Union forest minister Bhupender Yadav released six female and three male cheetahs for quarantine, MP's additional principal chief conservator of forests (wildlife) said. The animals were flown from Botswana to Gwalior on an IAF aircraft and were transported to Kuno in IAF choppers. PTI

Centre may get to set NH speed limits

New Delhi: Seeking to end confusion among commuters over speed limits on national highways and expressways, the road transport ministry has proposed that the authority be with the Centre to set these restrictions while state govts retain the power to notify the norms for all other roads within their jurisdiction, reports Dipak Dash.

The ministry recently shared a host of proposed changes to end ambiguities over speed limits that state govt and local police put on NHs and expressways.

As speed limits are set by local authorities, commuters who don't use NHs frequently end up paying fines. At present, the road transport ministry notifies the maximum speed limit for all categories of roads, but states can reduce this. People in the know said the ministry proposes to amend Section-112 of the MV Act, which empowers state govts to set both minimum and maximum speed limits. Similarly, Section 113, which empowers states to regulate the use of vehicles based on weight, would be amended. It has been proposed that for NHs, the power to specify norms will rest with the ministry, and states will be free to set limits for their roads.

SC: Make prisons reformative, give women right to open jails

'These Can't Be Labour Camps, Inmates Must Have Access To Family'

Dhananjay.Mahapatra

SC said reformation must be accompanied by structured opportunities

New Delhi: In an effort to transform India's punitive prison system into reformative centres, the Supreme Court has mandated radical reforms and ruled that women inmates, like male prisoners, have a fundamental right to be lodged in open correctional institutions (OCIs), which must change character from labour camps to vocational training centres and allow inmates' regular access to their families.

Penning a 138-page magnum opus of a judgment on what ails the Indian prison system and the judicially devised antidotes, a bench of Justices Vikram Nath and Sandeep Mehta appointed former SC judge S R Bhat as chairperson of a high-powered committee with an honorarium of Rs 10 lakh per month along with other facilities to frame within six months a nationally consistent common minimum standards for "Reforms and Governance of Open Correctional Institutions".

It asked states, which do not have open jails, to establish these institutions and mandated setting up of multi-layered monitoring systems to ensure that its series of directions are scrupulously complied with in a time bound manner. It posted the next hearing on the matter on Sept 1. It directed state committees to file quarterly reports on implementation of SC directed reforms in open prisons before the jurisdictional HCs, which in turn will file yearly reports before SC every March 31.

Writing the judgment for the bench, Justice Mehta said, "Exclusion of women from OCIs, or failure to transfer them despite being eligible for transfer from closed prisons to OCIs, amounts to blatant gender discrimination, violative of Articles 14 and 15 (1) of the Constitution, and also infringes upon their right to live with dignity as guaranteed under Article 21." He said, "Denial of access to OCIs deprives women prisoners of equal opportunity for rehabilitation and cannot be sustained in a constitutional order committed to equality, dignity and the transformative promise of justice. Immediate and effective corrective measures are, therefore, imperative in this regard."

The bench frowned at the long wait for a person lodged in closed jails — varying between 4 to 21 years in different states — to become eligible for shifting to an open jail and said, "The average age of OCI inmates predominantly fall between 35 to 50 years. It indicates that access is often delayed to a stage where the reformative and reintegrative potential stands significantly diluted." Justices Nath and Mehta said, "Reformation, rehabilitation and reintegration must lie at the heart of the criminal justice system. The constitutional guarantee of the right to life under Article 21, as interpreted by this court, encompasses within its ambit the obligation of govt to facilitate rehabilitation and enable prisoners to lead a life of dignity and normalcy."

SC said it is disturbing to find that a large number of OCIs continue to function like labour camps making inmates do repetitive manual or agricultural work, without meaningful avenues for skill development, personal advancement or economic sustenance.

"Such an approach risks reducing OCIs to functional labour camps, rather than institutions of reformation and reintegration. Reformation cannot be achieved through toil alone; it must be accompanied by structured opportunities that equip prisoners with skills relevant to contemporary social and economic realities," it said, directing the states and Union Territories to develop skill augmentation, vocational education and apprenticeship programmes for OCI inmates to enable them to find gainful employment after their release in sync with reformative ethos of criminal justice system.

SC argued against socially isolating OCI inmates and said "several states do not permit marriage, cohabitation or residence of family members with OCI inmates, and in most states, families and children are not allowed to reside within OCIs. This erosion of familial ties undermines the rehabilitative purpose of OCIs, as reintegration into society is intrinsically linked with preservation of family bonds."

On the right of women prisoners to be lodged in open jails, the bench said, "While the State is undoubtedly entitled, and indeed duty-bound, to adopt appropriate safeguards to prevent escape, violence, misuse of liberty or safety issues, such concerns cannot be accepted as a perpetual justification for denying women prisoners the very right to reformation and rehabilitation. "To deny women this right on speculative or generalised security grounds is nothing but an attempt to substitute administrative convenience for constitutional obligation. The State must, therefore, evolve gender-sensitive and security-conscious mechanisms that facilitate and enable, rather than frustrate, women's access to OCIs, for constitutional obligations cannot be made contingent upon institutional convenience," it said.

Global flu cases on rise, India to update vaccine

New Delhi: After a year marked by an early and sharp rise in flu cases in several countries, India is set to update its seasonal influenza vaccine to deal with a fast-spreading new strain, reports Anuja Jaiswal.

The World Health Organization (WHO) has issued its annual recommendations for the 2026-27 northern hemisphere flu season, based on global surveillance data that showed a new A(H3N2) variant — known as subclade K — becoming dominant. India, as part of the northern hemisphere, follows this guidance each year to decide which strains are covered in the flu shot.

The new H3N2 strain appears to spread more easily than earlier versions. While it is not necessarily more severe for each infected person, its higher transmissibility has led to increased case numbers and earlier-than-usual flu activity in many regions.

"The updated recommendations are timely, given the rapid global spread of the new A(H3N2) variant," said Dr Rommel Tickoo, director of internal medicine at Max Hospital, Saket. "H3N2 strains are often linked to more severe illness, especially in the elderly and those with medical conditions. Since influenza viruses keep changing, updating the vaccine each year is critical. Early vaccination of high-risk groups can reduce complications and hospital admissions."

WHO has recommended updated components for H1N1, H3N2 and B/Victoria strains for the upcoming season. Doctors advise getting the flu shot before winter. Those who need to prioritise vaccination include the elderly, pregnant women, healthcare workers, children, people with chronic diseases, immunocompromised individuals with health conditions.

Kerala temple hosts iftar to foster religious harmony

Kasaragod: A centuries-old Hindu shrine in this northernmost district of Kerala has hosted a community iftar for Muslim community members, as a mark of religious harmony.

The Sree Poobanam Kuzhi Temple at Thachangad here hosted the iftar in its courtyard on Thursday as part of the "Brahmakalashotsavam" festival which marked the reconsecration of the shrine deities. In the visuals on social media platforms and TV channels, it could be seen that a large number of Muslim men, wearing the traditional white cap, are sitting on neatly arranged tables in the decorated temple courtyard and enjoying their iftar feast. They broke their fast with dates and other delicacies.

Temple sources said the iftar was organised as local Muslims could not take part in the recent community feast held by shrine management due to Ramzan fasting

Sources said the iftar was organised as local Muslims could not take part in the recent community feast held by shrine management due to Ramzan fasting organised as local Muslim residents could not take part in the recent "annadanam" (community feast) organised by the shrine management due to the ongoing Ramzan fasting.

"This shrine and the festivals here are part of our life and childhood. We used to gather on its premises every day after our school hour. So any festivities here are not at all new or strange to us," a Muslim man told the media after taking part in the iftar. PTI
