Where are his organs, asks widow of Indian sailor who died in Venezuela

Arvind.Chauhan@timesofindia.com

Lucknow: Tears, unanswered questions and the daunting responsibility of raising a six-month-old baby alone now define the life of Ranjana, the widow of Indian seafarer Rakesh Chauhan, whose death in Venezuela in May this year and the subsequent discovery that nearly all his major internal organs were missing have triggered demands for an international investigation.

Sitting beside her husband's photograph at her maternal home in Sadarpur village in Gorakhpur's Chauri Chaura area, Ranjana says she has received neither substantive support from the company that recruited her husband for overseas deployment nor any financial assistance since his death.

"I want justice. I want to know how my husband died and how his organs went missing," Ranjana told TOI. "I have a six-month-old son to raise. My husband was the sole breadwinner of the family. The company has not provided any meaningful help or financial compensation."

The case came into public focus after the Forward Seamen's Union of India (FSUI) raised questions on social media regarding the circumstances surrounding the death of the 33-year-old seafarer from Deoria district. An autopsy conducted in Deoria reportedly found almost all major internal organs were absent from the body.

According to the FSUI, Rakesh's body was repatriated to India without any detailed autopsy findings or explanation from Venezuelan authorities regarding the precise circumstances of his death. The family subsequently sought a second autopsy in Deoria.

The findings raised fresh concerns. Doctors reported that most major internal organs — including the brain, heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, spleen, pancreas, stomach and intestines — were missing. The report also noted extensive surgical stitching from the neck to the pubic region and another incision across the head, suggesting that a major medical or postmortem procedure had been carried out before the body was returned to India.

Married to Rakesh four years ago, Ranjana recently completed her graduation. Following her husband's death, she has begun looking for work to support herself, her infant son Ritwik and the family. Rakesh had worked in the shipping industry for six years.
