

Govt scraps institutional round for medical and dental admissions in private colleges

Express News Service
Mumbai, July 23

IN A significant overhaul of medical admissions in Maharashtra, the state government has abolished the institutional round for undergraduate medical and dental admissions in private colleges, bringing all seat allotments under the centralised counselling process run by the State Common Entrance Test (CET) Cell.

The government has also introduced a penalty to curb seat blocking. Candidates allotted a seat in the final round who fail to join, leaving it vacant, will be barred from undergraduate medical and dental admissions in Maharashtra for the next two academic years.

The move had been pending since 2023, when the National Medical Commission (NMC) issued a circular directing that all medical admissions be conducted through CET Cell's Centralised Admission Process (CAP) rounds. Maharashtra was the last state to make this change.

The gazette notification became necessary because, despite the NMC's directive, private medical colleges in 2024 and 2025 had obtained court permission to conduct their own college-level admission rounds for seats that remained vacant, citing the CET Cell's own rules to justify the arrangement. Amending those rules was what made the workaround untenable.

The Medical Education and Drugs Department notified the revised rules on Thursday, saying all admissions, including stray vacancy rounds, will now go only through CAP. This ends the long-standing practice of private colleges holding separate institutional rounds to fill vacant seats at the end of the admission cycle, a process students, parents and activists had criticised as opaque, prone to arbitrary allotments and excessive fee demands.

"Now that all admissions have to be through CAP, the CET Cell will conduct admissions till the cut-off date. If seats remain vacant even after that, they will remain vacant, with no possibility of an institutional round," a CET Cell official said, adding it should discourage colleges from holding back seats for institutional rounds.

The new penalty is also meant to cut seat blocking. "The compulsion to take admission on the seat allotted in the final round will automatically reduce seat blocking. Students will no longer be able to decline a seat in the hope of securing a better option through an institutional round," the official said.

Medical education activists say the move will end seat blocking for good. Sachin Bangad, a medical admission counsellor, said institutional-level rounds held at the end of the admission cycle had long been troubled. "In order to have maximum seats in institutional level rounds, private colleges would deny admissions to allotted students in last rounds over small reasons. With the abolition of institutional level rounds, private colleges will no longer have that motivation to block seats because those will eventually go vacant if not filled through CAP," he said.

Bangad said the two-year ban for students who fail to join a seat allotted in the last round will also make candidates careful about participating in that round, "reducing the room of malpractices by colleges," he said.
