Voice-based kiosks to lodge complaints come up in Vizag

NEELIMA EATY @ Visakhapatnam

PEOPLE can now lodge police complaints without visiting a police station through voice-based e-complaint kiosks introduced by Vizag City Police at the railway station and RTC complex. Home Minister V Anitha inaugurated the kiosks, linked to the PGRS, on Saturday in the presence of CP Shankhabrata Bagchi and other officials.

The kiosks have been installed at the two busy locations, which together witness a daily footfall of around two to three lakh people. Citizens can register complaints by speaking into kiosk without help.

The system enables voice-based complaint registration in Telugu, English and Hindi. It guides citizens through simple questions to collect their details. It converts responses into text before registration and supports Telugu-to-Telugu transcription, Telugu-to-English transliteration and English-to-English transcription. It records the registration date and time, kiosk location and system identification number. After verification, the system uploads the complaint to a central server and generates a unique identification number. The kiosk prints an acknowledgement slip with details, the assigned police station and a QR code to track its status.

If location remains unclear, it seeks additional information. If it cannot determine the jurisdiction, it marks the complaint as 'Jurisdiction Pending' and sends it to Control Room for manual allocation. The concerned Station House Officer receives an alert, while complaint also appears on officer's dashboard.

Anitha said 1.5 lakh people travel via Vizag station every day and safety is important. She said kiosks would make police services transparent.

Tribals of remote hilltop P'varam villages struggle for healthcare

They depend on dolis to reach hospital in emergencies; medical teams trek to provide care

KV SAILENDRA @ Rajamahendravaram

POOR road connectivity continues to hamper access to healthcare for hundreds of tribal families living in remote hilltop villages in Polavaram district. Residents walk miles through hills and forest paths to reach hospitals, while doctors and health workers struggle to take medical services to isolated communities.

In the Kooturu Hospital area of Kunavaram mandal, 745 people live in 14 hill villages. Under the Yeduguralapalli Health Centre in Chinturu mandal, 800 people live in 16 villages, while 600 people in 10 villages come under Tulasipaka Health Centre. In Mareduhilli mandal, 600 people live in nine remote hill villages. Residents have to climb down the hills and travel long distances to reach mandal headquarters, hospitals and other essential services.

In cases of serious illness or pregnancy-related complications, people often carry patients down the hills on stretchers or dolis.

The Health Department has established health sub-centres in some remote areas, where ASHA workers provide medicines and inform health authorities about serious cases.

The challenges were evident recently when a medical team conducted camps at Ukkuluru Kothaveedhi and Lingavaram villages in Mareduhilli mandal.

"Three medical teams visit the hilltop villages once every three days via three different footpaths. If fewer cases or other issues are reported, we assess severity and visit villages, along with another doctor if needed. In emergencies, feeder ambulances are sent to foothills to transport patients to hospitals," Dr Srinivasa Dora of Kooturu Hospital, Kunavaram mandal, told TNIE.

Rampachodavaram MLA Miriyala Sireesha Devi said the government had improved healthcare in remote tribal areas by introducing tiny feeder ambulances and providing medical care on a war footing.

Human Rights Watch director Balu Akkasu said, "We have to bow our heads in shame that even after 80 years of independence, the doli system still exists in tribal and hilly areas. The pathetic situation prevails across all five ITDAs in the state. The government should take steps to improve healthcare services in these areas."
