Jantar has

tivist from the 1970s and went on to become the first woman president of the Delhi University Teachers' Association, said the shift to a more sequestered space from the Boat Club Lawns was disappointing to activists, even though it was only less than 2 km away from Parliament.

"From Boat Club, we would go right up to Rafi Marg. But Jantar Mantar was a corner where nobody could see the protesters. Only those who were participating in a protest were privy to it. But the idea of a demonstration was that the public should see it, hear the slogans and what the protesters are saying. The space has acquired a new character now because of the CJP protests and of the reach of visuals from there through social media, but we always thought of it as a strange place where we were hidden in a corner," she said.

Still, like lakhs of people over the decades, she has protested at Jantar Mantar several times.

The site has witnessed several defining moments of dissent: From Sharmila's 16-year-long fast against the Armed Forces Special Powers Act in Manipur; the protests after the 2012 Delhi gang-rape; the India Against Corruption movement; the Narmada Bachao Andolan; the protest by top wrestlers against then Wrestling Federation of India chief and BJP MP Brij Bhushan Sharan Singh; and, most recently, the anti-NEET paper leak protest led by the CJP in July, which led to the resignation of then Education Minister Dharmendra Pradhan.

Apart from these headline-grabbing movements, some of which even forced change, Jantar Mantar has also hosted smaller protests nearly every day over the years. At times these have involved Accredited Social Health Activists (ASHA) workers demanding better wages, and at others safai karmchalis protesting the deaths of their colleagues in sewers.

Despite its popularity, the use of Jantar Mantar as a protest site has been contentious. In 2017, the National Green Tribunal (NGT) directed that protest activities there be stopped after residents living nearby filed a petition raising concerns over noise and traffic. However, the order was reversed in 2018.

On the new venues, Hashmi said, "the Burari site is too far from the Parliament. People protest in Delhi to raise their voices and make it heard in the Parliament," said Hashmi.
