

Gadag villagers worship rain god Jokumara amid drought

RAGHOTTAM KOPPAR @ Gadag

WITH many people resting after the completion of Ganesha festival, villages in the rural parts of Gadag district have started worshipping Jokumar-swamy, a rain god. This year, Jokumar-swamy festival is being celebrated at a larger scale in most parts of the district due to the ongoing drought situation.

As part of this festival, farmers make a Jokumara idol from oil and soil taken from an anthill and install it in a bamboo basket in which it is adorned with neem leaves, pearl millet, jowar and hibiscus flowers. Women carry the basket with the Jokumara idol and visit seven villages, praying for rain. This is a rare ritual in North Karnataka.

Villagers offer items such as areca nuts, betel leaves, rice, grains, oil, salt, tamarind, dried red chilies and jaggery to these women. Women from rural areas place the idol of Jokumara in front of their houses in the villages and sing songs narrating the legend. This is also a way of promoting classical folk songs.

Jokumaraswamy is a deity with a short lifespan of seven days. Mythological tales mention a folk legend behind the Jokumaraswamy festival, which begins the day after the immersion of Lord Ganesha. Vimala Kadadi, a resident of Lakshmeshwar, said, "We have been celebrating Jokumaraswamy festival for many years. Jokumaraswamy is the rain god for us and we believe that he will bless us with rain. This year we are suffering from the El Nino effect and drought and hence many people are now worshipping this god. Women sing folk songs. Our children who are addicted to gadgets should learn these things." Sangamesh Menasagi, a villager of Jakkali, said, "This is a rare festival which starts immediately after Ganesha festival. We colloquially call this festival 'Ganappa Hoda Jokumara Banda'. In urban parts, people take rest after Ganesha immersion but in the rural areas, villagers do not rest but start worshipping Jokumaraswamy who blesses us with rain and protects farmers' crops. This year there is no rain and hence many villages of North Karnataka are celebrating Jokumaraswamy festival."

ASI to preserve historic monuments in Bidar

EXPRESS NEWS SERVICE @ Bidar

BIDAR'S historical monuments, including Bidar Fort, the Bahmani Sultans' tombs, Gurudwara Nanak Jhira Sahib, Pannashini Temple complex, Ashur monuments, Jharni Narasimha Swamy Temple and Shivakall Tirtha, are being preserved under the protection of the Archaeological Survey of India (ASI), said Tourism Department Assistant Director Shivalingappa Dengi. He was speaking after inaugurating a two-day orientation training workshop on the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), organised for Group-C government employees at the District Training Institute on Monday.

He said the monuments are examples of the remarkable architectural heritage of the Bahmani Sultanate and that their conservation, restoration and development of tourism facilities are helping protect them. In line with SDG 11, which focuses on sustainable cities and communities, preserving such heritage sites and passing the legacy on to future generations is an important responsibility. Tourism also contributes to local employment, economic benefits and cultural awareness, he added.

Assistant Director of the Department of Information and Public Relations Manjunath Sulolli said Bidar district had made significant achievements over the past decade in environmental conservation, water management, infrastructure development and science-based programmes.

He particularly highlighted the district's achievements under the 'Catch the Rain' campaign and the 'Jal Sanchay Jan Bhagidari' initiative, which received recognition at the national level. He said several district initiatives that transformed barren land into forests had also received attention at the national level. The Karanja reservoir, fed by the Manjara river system, has played a vital role in strengthening food security, economic self-reliance and horticultural production in the district.

The monuments are examples of the remarkable architectural heritage of the Bahmani Sultanate and their conservation and development of tourism facilities will help in protecting them

Langur pushes nonagenarian to death in Koppal

Koppal: In a shocking incident, a 91-year-old woman died after being pushed by a langur. The incident was reported from B T Patil Nagar of Koppal city. The incident was captured in CCTV and the footage went viral. The deceased Najamunisa Begum was standing in front of her house when the langur suddenly jumped on her and pushed her. She suffered a head injury and died on the spot. The langur also attacked another woman who came to help Najamunisa. The langur has escaped from the area and the reason for its behaviour remains unexplained. The local residents said they have been seeing langurs and monkeys in the area, but this is the first time that a human being has been attacked. ENS
