The Fear of Being Wrong

As a student, I feel that I am losing my patience and my thinking skills. The time my brain takes to retrieve information is longer than the time AI takes to retrieve the same information. Therefore, in the fast-paced world, I end up searching through artificial intelligence instead of my intelligence.

As days go by, I feel like I am losing my confidence. A one-minute double-check can save me from an awkward situation later, so why not use the resources? This was harmless at the start, but gradually, I started checking the message I sent to my friends. Why? Because I thought they would judge me. The friends who I knew before AI became part of our life

This made me wonder - when did I stop trusting myself and the people I knew for years?

The solution is not to stop using AI. It would be impossible to stop using AI in this fast-moving world. The solution is not to run to AI when I meet the smallest uncertainty but instead give my brain a chance.

Perhaps I am confusing being careful with being uncertain. This is because checking important details is never wrong. But if I am double-checking every small decision I make, the problem is no longer the decision or the information but my confidence in my own judgement.

The goal is not to avoid the mistake or the fear of being judged but getting comfortable with the possibility of making a mistake and the reality of people's perspective.

AI can give answers in seconds but my brain needs more time to think or retrieve. Maybe those extra minutes are not wasted time. Maybe those were the times my brain needed to remain mine.

I am not going to stop using Artificial Intelligence. I just don't want to stop using my intelligence.
