POLLUTION IN DELHI

estimate of Delhi's air quality index for the 24 hours to 9am on November 9 is 437; with the blank hours estimated from the readings either side of them, it is 471. The readings rose steeply before they stopped. At North Campus, a station run by the Indian Institute of Tropical Meteorology (IITM), PM2.5 climbed from 326 µg/m³ at 8pm to 999 at 10pm, and the next readings were blank. At CRRI Mathura Road, also an IITM station, it went from 394 to 981 in the two hours to 10.30pm. ITO, a CPCB station, last sent 994 at 10.45pm.

Across all 59 Delhi stations, 43 had a gap in PM2.5 between 10pm and 6am. At 14 of those 43, the last reading before the gap was 900 or more, within 100 of the 1,000 mark. Stations run by all three operators went blank: CPCB, IITM and the Delhi Pollution Control Committee (DPCC), the city's own pollution regulator.

Through the night, at least 37 of the 39 stations sent readings for nitrogen dioxide, carbon monoxide and ozone. PM10, a wider measure of dust that counts all particles up to 10 micrometres, including PM2.5, gives a higher reading than PM2.5 in any given air, so a limit at 1,000 would cut it off first. PM10 readings did drop out sooner and further: for the 1am and 2am hours, only 10 of the 39 stations sent one.

Readings darkened towards 1,000, then went blank. Each row is one of 39 Delhi stations; each cell is 15 minutes of PM2.5 from 8pm on November 8 to 7am on November 9. Hatched cells have no reading. DPCC stations report hourly, so their cells come in blocks of four. The darkest cells are readings of exactly 1,000; none went past it, according to CPCB's Central Control Room records as read by HT at 9.32am on November 9. From 10pm to 6am, the 39 stations should have sent 351 hourly PM2.5 readings, one from each station for each of the nine hours.

HT counts each of these as a station-hour. Of the 351, 148, or 42%, were blank. On nights in the days before Diwali, these stations left 3.9% blank. Last Diwali, at least 31 of the 39 sent PM2.5 in every hour after 10pm; this year, the count fell to 13.

Last Diwali, 29 of these stations went past 1,000. This year, none did. Each of the 39 stations' highest hour of PM2.5 on Diwali night, 2025 against 2026. Sources: OpenAQ's copy of CPCB's live feed (2025); CPCB's Central Control Room records as read by HT (2026). Provisional.

What the blanks do to the AQI

The air quality index (AQI) is CPCB's scale for turning pollution levels into a single score. Each pollutant's 24-hour average at a station is given a score, the station takes the score of its worst pollutant, and Delhi's figure is average of its stations.

HT applied CPCB's method to the 39 stations for the 24 hours to 9am on November 9. Counting only the readings recorded, HT's estimate of Delhi's AQI is 437. With the blank hours estimated, it is 471. CPCB's official AQI at 9am, for all Delhi stations, was 370; on the 39 stations alone, it was 381. The blank hours lower HT's estimate in two ways. They drop out of each station's 24-hour average, which is then built from the hours that were recorded, most of them outside the night's worst stretch. And seven stations fall short of the 16 hours of readings a station needs to count, so they leave the city's average.

HT estimated each blank stretch with a straight line from the station's last reading before it to its first reading after. North Campus recorded 999 at 10pm and 824 at 4.30am, so its blank hours are put at 972 at 11pm, 918 at 1am and 851 at 3.30am.

HT's estimate is above 400 even counting only the hours recorded. Whether CPCB's figure of 370 was computed without the blank hours is among the questions HT has put to it.

The blank night hours take 34 points off an estimate of Delhi's AQI. HT's estimates for the 24 hours to 9am on November 9 on 39 stations, as recorded and with blank hours estimated, against CPCB's official figure. HT's estimates, not CPCB figures. Source: CPCB's Central Control Room records as read by HT.

The scale tops out well below the levels recorded that night. Several of the stations that had gone blank were reading close to 1,000 just before their gaps, so the median of those still reporting probably understates the hour.

7 KILLED

Five people died on the spot, while two others succumbed to their injuries during treatment.

The deceased have been identified as Raju Pandit (40), son of Kunjo Prajapati; his wife Budhni Devi (50); Dhokal Pandit (45); Rameshwar Pandit (70); and Ramkisun Mahto (50). The identities of the remaining two deceased were yet to be confirmed

Chauparan police station officer-in-charge Pankaj Kumar said, "The impact of the collision was such that the pick-up van overturned, throwing several passengers onto the road."

The 14 injured were admitted to hospitals in Hazaribagh and Barhi, with three reported in critical condition. Those requiring advanced treatment were referred to Sheikh Bhikhari Medical College Hospital in Hazaribagh. Police and local residents joined the rescue operation.

The trailer driver fled after the accident, and police have launched a search to trace him. The coal-laden truck also overturned into the valley following the collision.

Raju Pandit, who worked in Mumbai, had returned to his native village after receiving news of his father's death and joined the family in taking the body to Varanasi. The journey intended for the final rites of one family elder ended in the deaths of seven people.

BERHAMPUR: Police in Odisha's Ganjam district have arrested two brothers for allegedly murdering an 80-year-old man on suspicion of practising witchcraft, an officer said on Monday.

The incident took place on the night of November 4 in Badangi village.

Victim Trinath Gouda (80), was a resident of the same village.The accused allegedly suspected him of practising witchcraft against their family.

After registering a case, police launched an investigation into the incident.

Bhanjanagar SDPO Deepak Mishra said the investigation revealed that the man used to perform traditional rituals in the village, leading some villagers and residents of nearby villages to suspect him of practising witchcraft.

On the night of the incident, the brothers allegedly entered the elderly man's house and dragged him to the verandah. They beat him with his walking stick before striking his head and face with a cement block, resulting in his death on the spot, police said.
